

DIONYSIA

— FOUNDING CREATOR PACK —

For Andre.

— PREPARED, BY HAND, ON THE EVENING OF MAY 13, 2026 —

Andre — the warmth of your first replies, "DIONYSIA fantastic concept," and then "excited to move forward, just let me know next steps for getting my short films uploaded," is the energy this founding chapter is being built on. They are the reason this pack is sitting in front of you tonight rather than next week.

What follows is the long-form version of the yes you already gave. It lays out what DIONYSIA is, what it asks of the founding circle, and how the first chapter unfolds from here. Read it the way you'd read a director's bible — and write back with anything that lands wrong, anything that should be different, anything missing. The room is being built with you, not at you.

I. WELCOME

DIONYSIA is not another upload feed and it is not a curated showcase that pretends to be a platform. It is the beginning of a permanent institution: a global home for serious cinema made in a new medium, built to outlast a hundred trend cycles and to scale, deliberately, into one of the cultural surfaces this medium will be defined by.

The first chapter is being built with a founding circle of filmmakers whose craft long predates the current AI moment — people who have already built studios, schools, careers, and bodies of work, and who can tell the difference between a generated frame and a directed one. You are one of them. Not as an early user of a product, and not as a name on a launch list. As one of the architects of the institution itself.

Your arc is the exact shape of what this founding circle is being assembled around. Two decades of directing light in pipelines that delivered some of the last era's most-watched theatrical work, at Industrial Light & Magic. A return to Jakarta to found Enspire Studio, and then ESDA — a school with more than twenty branches across Indonesia, training the next generation of digital artists in the same craft you came up in. And now NOM NOM Studio, an AI-powered IP house building for animation and games — the bridge between the medium you mastered and the medium that comes next. You don't read like a take on the future of cinema. You read like its continuity.

Everything DIONYSIA will mean in five years gets shaped by the work this founding circle puts on the wall in this first chapter — and by the standard you, collectively, decide is the standard. The point of this document isn't to ask you to agree with every word. It's to make sure you know exactly what you are joining, before you join it.

II. THE FOUNDING CHARTER

Every platform pretends to have values. Most discover them under pressure and rewrite them quietly. DIONYSIA's charter is fixed, in writing, before the doors open. It is the rail every editorial, product, and infrastructure decision will pass through — at this size, and at every size after.

— WE BELIEVE —

- that AI is a medium, the way 16mm or DV is a medium — not a subject, not a genre, and never the noun in our sentences.
- that the films are directed, not summoned. A tool can render a frame. Only a filmmaker can intend one.
- that emotional resonance is the only criterion that matters. Audiences will always forgive imperfect images. They never forgive emotional disconnection.
- that a serious work deserves to land in a place where serious people will actually watch it — credits, breath, silence, and all.
- that curation is care, not gatekeeping. A "no" with a reason is more respectful than an algorithm's indifference.
- that the filmmakers who built the first chapter should be honored as such — economically, editorially, and culturally — for as long as the platform exists.

— WE REJECT —

- the contextual collapse of feeds — where a year of work shares a scroll with an "animals dancing" clip and authorship quietly disappears.
- the slot machine of unmoderated upload, the cynicism of "creator-owned" as marketing copy without real ownership, and any phrase that uses the word "content" to describe a film.
- open submissions without an editorial wall. Submission is not publication.
- algorithmic for-you feeds, where popularity becomes a substitute for taste and curation disappears into noise. Discovery on DIONYSIA stays editorially intentional — at this catalog size, and at every size after.

— any framing — internal or external — that treats founding filmmakers as a stepping stone, a stage, or an audience to be replaced. You are not the rollout. You are the institution.

III. YOUR ROLE

The honest version of what we are asking — and, just as importantly, of what we are not.

— WHAT WE ASK —

1. ONE FILM, OR MORE, WHEN READY.

We are inviting you to bring the work you'd want this place to be defined by. That can be a single film, or a small curated set from across what you, Enspire, or NOM NOM is producing — whatever shape best represents what you want a founding-circle filmmaker of DIONYSIA to be known for. For a founder whose studios are producing IP at real cadence, the door is genuinely open: we would rather you bring three or four pieces you want this place to define you by than rush a single one. We are not chasing volume. We are honoring the standard you set.

2. PRODUCTION NOTES, WRITTEN BY YOU.

A short director's statement for each film — what the film is, what it was trying to be, what the tools were, where the hand was, where the machine was. This is not marketing copy. It is the record that lets a viewer take your work seriously.

3. YOUR NAME ON THE FOUNDING WALL.

A public credit as a founding filmmaker of DIONYSIA, with the right to revoke it at any time. The wall is the most visible asset in the platform's first year, and it belongs to the people who built the first chapter — permanently, regardless of where DIONYSIA goes after.

4. PRESENCE, ON TWO NIGHTS.

The Founding Filmmakers night — gated, private, peer-to-peer — and a single public premiere window in the weeks after, where you appear in the live room with viewers for thirty to forty-five minutes. Both are detailed in Section V, including how the Jakarta clock is accommodated.

5. HONESTY, IN PRIVATE.

Tell us what is broken. Tell us what is missing. Tell us when the editorial framing is wrong about your work. The founding circle is a peerage, not a customer base — and the only way the platform stays serious as it scales is if the people who built the first chapter speak honestly to the person running it.

— WHAT WE DO NOT ASK —

1. NO EXCLUSIVITY REQUIRED.

At this stage, no exclusivity is asked of you, on any film. You can keep distributing wherever you already do — your YouTube channel, festivals, your studio's own pipelines, anywhere. As the platform matures, opt-in premiere-window agreements with clear, transparent terms will be introduced — never as a default condition, and never tied to founding-circle status. The regulations that govern licensing, windowing, and rights will be written carefully and shared in writing before they take effect.

2. NO VOLUME TARGETS, NO UPLOAD CADENCE.

We will never ask you to ship faster. The founding circle exists in the opposite direction from those incentives. If you bring one film or you bring several, both are welcomed on the terms you set.

3. NO MARKETING LABOR.

You are not a growth channel for the platform. We will not ask you to repost, cross-promote, tag, or perform on social. If you choose to share, that is yours.

4. NO SILENCE IN EXCHANGE.

If at any point this stops being a place you want your work in, you tell us, we lift the films, and you leave with everything you came with. The door swings both ways, at every size the platform reaches.

IV. SUBMISSION SPECIFICATIONS

The platform runs on a premium video pipeline (Mux), the same infrastructure used by MasterClass, Patreon, and HBO Max. The specs below will read as familiar — they are, deliberately, the language a lighting and compositing veteran already speaks.

- MASTER FORMAT ProRes 422 HQ, DNxHR HQ, or high-bitrate H.264 / H.265 .mp4. Any high-quality master is fine; we transcode from there.
- RESOLUTION 1920—1080 minimum; 3840—2160 (4K) preferred where it exists. Vertical orientations supported but framed for letterbox display by default.
- FRAME RATE Native to your project — 23.976, 24, 25, or 29.97 fps. Do not conform unnecessarily.
- AUDIO Stereo or 5.1, 48 kHz, $\hat{a}^{\sim}14$ LUFS integrated target (broadcast-streaming standard). Loudness pass strongly preferred; we can normalize if needed.
- RUNTIME No upper or lower bound. Shorts (under 15 minutes), features, episodic — the editorial frame adapts. We resist the dogma that any one runtime is "right" for the medium.
- POSTER A title-card still at 800—1200 (vertical) plus a 1920—1080 hero frame. If you don't have a poster, we'll cut one from the film with you.
- CAPTIONS .vtt or .srt — English required (machine-generated draft is fine, your final approval). Indonesian as a second track if you'd like.
- PROVENANCE Tools used, hand-authored layers, AI-generated layers, and — if any synthesized likeness appears — performer-consent attestation. Part of the public film record. A moat, not a footnote.
- DELIVERY Direct link to a private cloud transfer (Frame.io, Dropbox, Google Drive, WeTransfer Pro). No public file hosts. Receipt confirmed in writing inside twenty-four hours.

These specifications are the current pipeline. The platform's video, audio, and rendering quality will continue to improve with every update — and masters delivered into the founding library today automatically inherit every upgrade after. The standard floor will only rise. Yours rises with it.

If any of the above is a problem — gear, format, anything from the Jakarta studio side — write back. The specs are a target, not a wall.

V. THE TWO NIGHTS

The first chapter has two scheduled moments. Both are deliberately curated. Both are non-negotiable as cinema events — they happen with you, or they do not happen.

— THE FIRST NIGHT —

Founding Filmmakers, Sunday, May 24, 2026.

Private, gated, peer-only. The platform opens for the first time, with the founding filmmakers and the founder in the room. Magic-link sign-in, allowlist-only — no public URL works, no link forwards, no spillover. The work on the walls that night is yours and the others'. Your films are the catalog.

No press, no metrics, no audience-facing spectacle. The point of the first night is that the people who built the institution are the first to see it standing up.

— THE SECOND NIGHT —

DIONYSIA First Light, June 8"–10, 2026 (one evening, date confirmed by June 1).

On the evening of June 8"–10, we'll open the doors a little wider — for one night only. Film experts, curators, fellow artists, and the people you'd want in the room are invited to a live premiere of the founding work. You'll be the host, not the visitor. More on that closer to the date.

Live comment surface (Discord, Telegram, or Substack — locked by June 1). One founding film unveiled in full. The filmmaker present in the live room for thirty to forty-five minutes after the credits roll. Format borrowed from MUBI's "Film of the Night" and the indie album-release listening party, sharpened for cinema.

Your role on the second night is not to perform. It is to be in the room while serious people watch your work for the first time, and to answer the questions that follow with the same care you put into making it.

Jakarta sits roughly eleven hours ahead of where the platform's launch coordinates fall. The founding circle is global by construction; the logistics flex around your clock. Your access on the first night opens at a time that works for Jakarta, and your live presence on the second night will be scheduled to a window that respects WIB, not Toronto's evening.

VI. A DIRECT LINE

There is no support queue. There is no founding-creator portal. There is one person running this, and that person is reachable.

For anything substantive — film delivery, the editorial framing of your work, the second-night logistics, a doubt about the institution, an idea that should change the platform — write to kanishtuteja@gmail.com directly. Replies inside twenty-four hours, usually faster, time zones notwithstanding.

The platform itself lives at dionysia.ca. Until May 24 it shows a single opening surface; on the first night, the room behind it opens, and your allowlisted email gets you in.

If something is wrong, say it directly. The founding circle is small enough — and serious enough — that there is no professional reason to soften the signal. You're not a customer. You're a peer.

VII. CLOSING

The cultural surfaces that defined the last century of cinema — the studios, the festivals, the houses — all began with a founding circle of artists who took the work seriously before anyone was watching.

DIONYSIA is being built to be one of those surfaces for the medium that comes next: to be everywhere this work deserves to be seen, on every screen it deserves to live on, for as long as cinema is made this way. The institution begins with you.

The reel is hand-set, frame by frame. Thank you for being one of the hands.

— ONE LAST WORD, JUST FOR YOU —

Andre, the path from directing light at ILM on a decade of theatrical work, to founding Enspire and ESDA and now NOM NOM, is the exact through-line DIONYSIA is built to honor: a filmmaker who has always been the one in front of the medium, not behind it. The craft you came up in, the institutions you've already built in Indonesia, and the AI cinema infrastructure you are building now are not three different careers. They are one continuous direction — and that direction is the one DIONYSIA is trying to be the home for.

Southeast Asia's first chapter of this medium runs through Jakarta. Having you in the founding circle is not symbolic. It changes what the platform is, and it changes what the rest of the world's serious AI filmmakers see when they look at the wall and decide whether this is a place worth being in.

Whatever the work you'd want this place to be defined by — bring it. Whatever needs to flex around your studio's calendar, your time zone, your team — say it. The institution begins with you in the room.

Welcome in.

— Kanish

FOUNDER, DIONYSIA
DIONYSIA.CA