

DIONYSIA

— FOUNDING CREATOR PACK —

For Brice.

— PREPARED, BY HAND, ON THE EVENING OF MAY 14, 2026 —

Brice — the line you wrote, "Audiences will always forgive imperfect images, but they never forgive emotional disconnection. Only the very best filmmakers truly know how to do that," is not just a beautifully clear statement of taste. It is now the editorial criterion this entire platform is being built around. You'll see it stated as a belief in Section II below, almost word-for-word — because we could not write a clearer version of what DIONYSIA's editorial wall actually filters for. Your sentence became the rail.

That alone would have been reason enough to make the founding circle real for you. But what you wrote after — "if you build the platform, I'd genuinely be happy to be part of it" — is the door you opened, not the door you walked through. What follows is the long-form version of the yes you already gave.

Read it the way you'd read a director's bible. Write back with anything that lands wrong, anything missing, anything you'd change — including the sentence below that started as yours. The room is being built with you in it.

I. WELCOME

DIONYSIA is not another upload feed and it is not a curated showcase that pretends to be a platform. It is the beginning of a permanent institution: a global home for serious cinema made in a new medium, built to outlast a hundred trend cycles and to scale, deliberately, into one of the cultural surfaces this medium will be defined by.

The first chapter is being built with a founding circle of filmmakers whose craft long predates the current AI moment — people who have already built studios, schools, careers, and bodies of work, and who can tell the difference between a generated frame and a directed one. You are one of them. Not as an early user of a product, and not as a name on a launch list. As one of the architects of the institution itself.

Your arc is the rare one where the editorial bar and the production output point at the same person. As the founder of TOUKI, your AI films production house, and the director behind HOPE — already a Best AI Film winner, with the Best AI Enhanced Film finalist nod and AI Film Awards official selection stacked on the same series — you have already done, under formal recognition, what most of this medium is still arguing about. Add the co-founding of TheMagnifier as the AI media layer for creatives, and the ambassadorship at ANIA as France's institutional voice for this work, and the founding circle gets its European anchor: Parisian, formally credentialed, and already shipping the standard the platform is being built to honor.

Everything DIONYSIA will mean in five years gets shaped by the work this founding circle puts on the wall in this first chapter — and by the standard you, collectively, decide is the standard. You have already, in writing, set that standard for the rest of us. This document is the long-form version of what comes next.

II. THE FOUNDING CHARTER

Every platform pretends to have values. Most discover them under pressure and rewrite them quietly. DIONYSIA's charter is fixed, in writing, before the doors open. It is the rail every editorial, product, and infrastructure decision will pass through — at this size, and at every size after.

— WE BELIEVE —

- that AI is a medium, the way 16mm or DV is a medium — not a subject, not a genre, and never the noun in our sentences.
- that the films are directed, not summoned. A tool can render a frame. Only a filmmaker can intend one.
- *that emotional resonance is the only criterion that matters. Audiences will always forgive imperfect images. They never forgive emotional disconnection.
- that a serious work deserves to land in a place where serious people will actually watch it — credits, breath, silence, and all.
- that curation is care, not gatekeeping. A "no" with a reason is more respectful than an algorithm's indifference.
- that the filmmakers who built the first chapter should be honored as such — economically, editorially, and culturally — for as long as the platform exists.

* The marked sentence is yours, lightly compressed. It is on the wall because you wrote it.

— WE REJECT —

- the contextual collapse of feeds — where a year of work shares a scroll with an "animals dancing" clip and authorship quietly disappears.
- the slot machine of unmoderated upload, the cynicism of "creator-owned" as marketing copy without real ownership, and any phrase that uses the word "content" to describe a film.
- open submissions without an editorial wall. Submission is not publication.
- algorithmic for-you feeds, where popularity becomes a substitute for taste and curation disappears into noise. Discovery on DIONYSIA stays editorially intentional — at this catalog size, and at every size after.

- any framing — internal or external — that treats founding filmmakers as a stepping stone, a stage, or an audience to be replaced. You are not the rollout. You are the institution.*

III. YOUR ROLE

The honest version of what we are asking — and, just as importantly, of what we are not.

— WHAT WE ASK —

1. ONE FILM, OR MORE, WHEN READY.

We are inviting you to bring the work you'd want this place to be defined by. That can be HOPE in its entirety, a curated selection from TOUKI's slate, or new work made on a timeline that respects what serious cinema actually takes. We are not chasing volume. We are honoring the standard you and TOUKI have already set in this medium.

2. PRODUCTION NOTES, WRITTEN BY YOU.

A short director's statement for each film — what the film is, what it was trying to be, what the tools were, where the hand was, where the machine was. This is not marketing copy. It is the record that lets a viewer take your work seriously, and the register your laurels were earned in.

3. YOUR NAME ON THE FOUNDING WALL.

A public credit as a founding filmmaker of DIONYSIA, with the right to revoke it at any time. The wall is the most visible asset in the platform's first year, and it belongs to the people who built the first chapter — permanently, regardless of where DIONYSIA goes after. TOUKI's name appears beside yours if you'd like.

4. PRESENCE, ON TWO NIGHTS.

The Founding Filmmakers night — gated, private, peer-to-peer — and a single public premiere window in the weeks after, where you appear in the live room with viewers for thirty to forty-five minutes. Both are detailed in Section V, including how the Paris clock is accommodated.

5. HONESTY, IN PRIVATE.

Tell us what is broken. Tell us what is missing. Tell us when the editorial framing is wrong about your work. The founding circle is a peerage, not a customer base — and the only way the platform stays serious as it scales is if the people who built the first chapter speak honestly to the person running it. You have already done this once, and it produced the sentence at the center of Section II. Keep doing it.

— WHAT WE DO NOT ASK —

1. NO EXCLUSIVITY REQUIRED.

At this stage, no exclusivity is asked of you, on any film. TOUKI's work can keep distributing wherever you already place it, and TheMagnifier's editorial channels are entirely yours. As the platform matures, opt-in premiere-window agreements with clear, transparent terms will be introduced — never as a default condition, and never tied to founding-circle status. The regulations that govern licensing, windowing, and rights will be written carefully and shared in writing before they take effect.

2. NO VOLUME TARGETS, NO UPLOAD CADENCE.

We will never ask you to ship faster. The founding circle exists in the opposite direction from those incentives. If you bring one film or you bring several, both are welcomed on the terms you set.

3. NO MARKETING LABOR.

You are not a growth channel for the platform. We will not ask you to repost, cross-promote, tag, or perform on social. If you choose to share through TOUKI's channels, TheMagnifier's, or your ANIA platform, that is yours.

4. NO SILENCE IN EXCHANGE.

If at any point this stops being a place you want your work in, you tell us, we lift the films, and you leave with everything you came with. The door swings both ways, at every size the platform reaches.

IV. SUBMISSION SPECIFICATIONS

The platform runs on a premium video pipeline (Mux), the same infrastructure used by MasterClass, Patreon, and HBO Max. The specs below will read as familiar — they are, deliberately, the language an Award-winning AI Director already speaks.

- MASTER FORMAT ProRes 422 HQ, DNxHR HQ, or high-bitrate H.264 / H.265 .mp4. Any festival-grade master is fine; we transcode from there.
- RESOLUTION 1920×1080 minimum; 3840×2160 (4K) preferred where it exists. Vertical orientations supported but framed for letterbox display by default.
- FRAME RATE Native to your project — 23.976, 24, 25, or 29.97 fps. Do not conform unnecessarily.
- AUDIO Stereo or 5.1, 48 kHz, -14 LUFS integrated target (broadcast-streaming standard). Loudness pass strongly preferred; we can normalize if needed.
- RUNTIME No upper or lower bound. Shorts (under 15 minutes), features, episodic (HOPE in series form is exactly the kind of work this platform is for) — the editorial frame adapts.
- POSTER A title-card still at 800×1200 (vertical) plus a 1920×1080 hero frame. If TOUKI's existing key art works, send what you already have.
- CAPTIONS .vtt or .srt — English required. French as the original or second track, whichever applies. Machine-generated draft is fine; your final approval.
- PROVENANCE Tools used, hand-authored layers, AI-generated layers, and — if any synthesized likeness appears — performer-consent attestation. Part of the public film record. A moat, not a footnote.
- DELIVERY Direct link to a private cloud transfer (Frame.io, Dropbox, Google Drive, WeTransfer Pro). No public file hosts. Receipt confirmed in writing inside twenty-four hours.

These specifications are the current pipeline. The platform's video, audio, and rendering quality will continue to improve with every update — and masters delivered into the founding library today automatically inherit every upgrade after. The standard floor will only rise. Yours rises with it.

If any of the above is a problem — gear constraints, formats from TOUKI's side, anything — write back. The specs are a target, not a wall.

V. THE TWO NIGHTS

The first chapter has two scheduled moments. Both are deliberately curated. Both are non-negotiable as cinema events — they happen with you, or they do not happen.

— THE FIRST NIGHT —

Founding Filmmakers, Sunday, May 24, 2026.

Private, gated, peer-only. The platform opens for the first time, with the founding filmmakers and the founder in the room. Magic-link sign-in, allowlist-only — no public URL works, no link forwards, no spillover. The work on the walls that night is yours and the others'. Your films are the catalog.

No press, no metrics, no audience-facing spectacle. The point of the first night is that the people who built the institution are the first to see it standing up.

— THE SECOND NIGHT —

DIONYSIA First Light, June 8–10, 2026 (one evening, date confirmed by June 1).

On the evening of June 8–10, we'll open the doors a little wider — for one night only. Film experts, curators, fellow artists, and the people you'd want in the room are invited to a live premiere of the founding work. You'll be the host, not the visitor. More on that closer to the date.

Live comment surface (Discord, Telegram, or Substack — locked by June 1). One founding film unveiled in full. The filmmaker present in the live room for thirty to forty-five minutes after the credits roll. Format borrowed from MUBI's "Film of the Night" and the indie album-release listening party, sharpened for cinema.

Your role on the second night is not to perform. It is to be in the room while serious people watch your work for the first time, and to answer the questions that follow with the same care you put into making it.

Paris sits roughly six hours ahead of where the platform's launch coordinates fall. The founding circle is global by construction; the logistics flex around your clock. Your access on the first night opens at a time that works for Paris, and your live presence on the second night will be scheduled to a window that respects CET, not Toronto's evening.

VI. A DIRECT LINE

There is no support queue. There is no founding-creator portal. There is one person running this, and that person is reachable.

For anything substantive — film delivery, the editorial framing of your work, the second-night logistics, a doubt about the institution, an idea that should change the platform — write to kanishtuteja@gmail.com directly. Replies inside twenty-four hours, usually faster, time zones notwithstanding.

The platform itself lives at dionysia.ca. Until May 24 it shows a single opening surface. On the first night, the room behind it opens, and your allowlisted email gets you in.

If something is wrong, say it directly. You have already proven you do. The founding circle is small enough — and serious enough — that there is no professional reason to soften the signal. You're not a customer. You're a peer.

VII. CLOSING

The cultural surfaces that defined the last century of cinema — the studios, the festivals, the houses — all began with a founding circle of artists who took the work seriously before anyone was watching.

DIONYSIA is being built to be one of those surfaces for the medium that comes next: to be everywhere this work deserves to be seen, on every screen it deserves to live on, for as long as cinema is made this way. The institution begins with you in it.

The reel is hand-set, frame by frame. Thank you for the sentence the wall is built on.

— ONE LAST WORD, JUST FOR YOU —

Brice, the through-line here is the most direct of anyone in the founding circle so far. The line you wrote in passing is now the editorial criterion this entire platform passes through. The films you have already directed under TOUKI are already lauded at the standard the platform is being built to honor. And Paris is now one of the cities the first chapter of this medium has to run through. You did not just say yes to a founding-circle invitation. You provided the sentence the wall is built on. The founding circle exists, in part, because what you said was true.

ANIA's ambassadorship matters here, and so does TheMagnifier. The institutional voice of a country's AI association plus a working media surface for creatives are exactly the registers DIONYSIA was missing on the European side. Having you in the room changes what every founder coming after you reads when they see who else has already accepted.

Whatever the work you'd want this place to be defined by — HOPE, new TOUKI films, anything — bring it. Whatever needs to flex around TOUKI's calendar, TheMagnifier's roadmap, your ANIA duties, or the Paris–Toronto clock — say it. The room is being built with that conversation already in mind.

Welcome in.
