

DIONYSIA

— FOUNDING CREATOR PACK —

For Roxanne.

— PREPARED, BY HAND, ON THE EVENING OF MAY 14, 2026 —

Roxanne — the phrase you sent us, "upload and disappear into the void," is one of the sharpest descriptions of the problem this platform exists to solve that has been written down by anyone in this medium. It is the failure mode every serious filmmaker working with these tools already knows by heart but had not, until you, named in five words. That phrasing is already shaping how the platform talks about itself.

And what you said after — "Yes, please send it over" — kept the conversation alive in exactly the right direction. The manifesto is in your hands. What follows is its substantive companion: not the founding myth, but the working contract underneath it. What DIONYSIA is. What the founding circle is. What it asks, what it does not, and what your decision would actually be deciding on.

Read them side by side. Take whatever time the work needs. Write back with anything that lands wrong, anything missing, anything you would say differently — your eye is exactly the eye this document was written to be evaluated by. The room is being built with you, not at you.

I. WELCOME

DIONYSIA is not another upload feed and it is not a curated showcase that pretends to be a platform. It is the beginning of a permanent institution: a global home for serious cinema made in a new medium, built to outlast a hundred trend cycles and to scale, deliberately, into one of the cultural surfaces this medium will be defined by.

The first chapter is being built with a founding circle of filmmakers whose craft long predates the current AI moment — people who have already built studios, schools, careers, and bodies of work, and who can tell the difference between a generated frame and a directed one. You are being invited into that circle. Not as an early user of a product, and not as a name on a launch list. As one of the architects of the institution itself.

Your arc is the deepest in the founding circle so far. Four decades inside the animated-cinema pipeline — director, animator, art director, concept artist, animation supervisor, storyboard artist, layout artist, character designer — across feature films, shorts, documentaries, television, video games, and advertising. Credits on Spielberg's An American Tail: Fievel Goes West, on the Oscar-nominated The Village, on the Emmy-winning Arthur; illustrated segments running on Science Channel, Discovery, and National Geographic. A BFA in Cinema from Concordia, an Emmy of your own, and now — as a French-Canadian filmmaker working from El Valle de Antón — an AI Film Director, Art Director, and creative partner to the leading platforms in this medium, signing sometimes as Roxanne Ducharme and sometimes as TrashCanRoxanne. That is not a career pivoting into AI. That is a body of work expanding into a new medium with the same hand.

Everything DIONYSIA will mean in five years gets shaped by the work this founding circle puts on the wall in this first chapter — and by the standard you, collectively, decide is the standard. The point of this document isn't to ask you to agree with every word. It's to make sure you know exactly what you would be joining, before you decide to join it.

II. THE FOUNDING CHARTER

Every platform pretends to have values. Most discover them under pressure and rewrite them quietly. DIONYSIA's charter is fixed, in writing, before the doors open. It is the rail every editorial, product, and infrastructure decision will pass through — at this size, and at every size after.

— WE BELIEVE —

- that AI is a medium, the way 16mm or DV is a medium — not a subject, not a genre, and never the noun in our sentences.
- that the films are directed, not summoned. A tool can render a frame. Only a filmmaker can intend one.
- that emotional resonance is the only criterion that matters. Audiences will always forgive imperfect images. They never forgive emotional disconnection.
- that a serious work deserves to land in a place where serious people will actually watch it — credits, breath, silence, and all.
- that curation is care, not gatekeeping. A "no" with a reason is more respectful than an algorithm's indifference.
- that the filmmakers who built the first chapter should be honored as such — economically, editorially, and culturally — for as long as the platform exists.

— WE REJECT —

- the contextual collapse of feeds — where a year of work shares a scroll with an "animals dancing" clip and authorship quietly disappears.
- the slot machine of unmoderated upload, the cynicism of "creator-owned" as marketing copy without real ownership, and any phrase that uses the word "content" to describe a film. The void you named is exactly what we are refusing to be.
- open submissions without an editorial wall. Submission is not publication.
- algorithmic for-you feeds, where popularity becomes a substitute for taste and curation disappears into noise. Discovery on DIONYSIA stays editorially intentional — at this catalog size, and at every size after.

— any framing — internal or external — that treats founding filmmakers as a stepping stone, a stage, or an audience to be replaced. You are not the rollout. You are the institution.

III. YOUR ROLE

The honest version of what would be asked of you — and, just as importantly, of what would not.

— WHAT WE ASK —

1. ONE FILM, OR MORE, WHEN READY.

If you decide this is the place, we are inviting you to bring the work you'd want it to be defined by. That can be a single film, a small curated set from across the AI-directed work you've already made, or anything new from the same hand. We are not chasing volume. We are honoring the standard you have already set across four decades of cinema.

2. PRODUCTION NOTES, WRITTEN BY YOU.

A short director's statement for each film — what the film is, what it was trying to be, what the tools were, where the hand was, where the machine was. This is not marketing copy. It is the record that lets a viewer take your work seriously — and the kind of writing you, of all the founders, are already practiced in.

3. YOUR NAME ON THE FOUNDING WALL.

A public credit as a founding filmmaker of DIONYSIA, with the right to revoke it at any time. The wall is the most visible asset in the platform's first year, and it belongs to the people who built the first chapter — permanently, regardless of where DIONYSIA goes after. Sign as Roxanne Ducharme, as TrashCanRoxanne, or both — whichever you want associated with this work is yours.

4. PRESENCE, ON TWO NIGHTS.

The Founding Filmmakers night — gated, private, peer-to-peer — and a single public premiere window in the weeks after, where you appear in the live room with viewers for thirty to forty-five minutes. Both are detailed in Section V. Events and community — your stated reason for staying in this medium at all — are not features here. They are the spine.

5. HONESTY, IN PRIVATE.

Tell us what is broken. Tell us what is missing. Tell us when the editorial framing is wrong about your work. The founding circle is a peerage, not a customer base. You have already named the failure mode in five words. That kind of clarity is what the platform needs in the room.

— WHAT WE DO NOT ASK —

1. NO EXCLUSIVITY REQUIRED.

At this stage, no exclusivity is asked of you, on any film. Your work can keep distributing wherever you already place it — your platform partnerships, festival channels, anywhere. As the platform matures, opt-in premiere-window agreements with clear, transparent terms will be introduced — never as a default condition, and never tied to founding-circle status. The regulations that govern licensing, windowing, and rights will be written carefully and shared in writing before they take effect.

2. NO VOLUME TARGETS, NO UPLOAD CADENCE.

We will never ask you to ship faster. The founding circle exists in the opposite direction from those incentives. If you bring one film or you bring several, both are welcomed on the terms you set.

3. NO MARKETING LABOR.

You are not a growth channel for the platform. We will not ask you to repost, cross-promote, tag, or perform on social. If you choose to share through your own channels or your platform partners, that is yours.

NO SILENCE IN EXCHANGE.

If at any point this stops being a place you want your work in, you tell us, we lift the films, and you leave with everything you came with. The door swings both ways, at every size the platform reaches.

IV. SUBMISSION SPECIFICATIONS

The platform runs on a premium video pipeline (Mux), the same infrastructure used by MasterClass, Patreon, and HBO Max. The specs below will read as familiar — they are, deliberately, the language a four-decade animation veteran with Emmy, Oscar-nominated, and Spielberg-feature credits already speaks.

- MASTER FORMAT ProRes 422 HQ, DNxHR HQ, or high-bitrate H.264 / H.265 .mp4. Any broadcast-grade master is fine; we transcode from there.
- RESOLUTION 1920×1080 minimum; 3840×2160 (4K) preferred where it exists. Vertical orientations supported but framed for letterbox display by default.
- FRAME RATE Native to your project — 23.976, 24, 25, or 29.97 fps. Do not conform unnecessarily.
- AUDIO Stereo or 5.1, 48 kHz, -14 LUFS integrated target (broadcast-streaming standard). Loudness pass strongly preferred; we can normalize if needed.
- RUNTIME No upper or lower bound. Shorts (under 15 minutes), features, episodic, animated segments — the editorial frame adapts. We resist the dogma that any one runtime is "right" for the medium.
- POSTER A title-card still at 800×1200 (vertical) plus a 1920×1080 hero frame. If your existing art direction works, send what you already have.
- CAPTIONS .vtt or .srt — English required. French as the original or second track, whichever applies. Machine-generated draft is fine; your final approval.
- PROVENANCE Tools used, hand-authored layers, AI-generated layers, and — if any synthesized likeness appears — performer-consent attestation. Part of the public film record. A moat, not a footnote.
- DELIVERY Direct link to a private cloud transfer (Frame.io, Dropbox, Google Drive, WeTransfer Pro). No public file hosts. Receipt confirmed in writing inside twenty-four hours.

These specifications are the current pipeline. The platform's video, audio, and rendering quality will continue to improve with every update — and masters delivered into the founding library today automatically inherit every upgrade after. The standard floor will only rise. Yours rises with it.

If any of the above is a problem — gear constraints, format mismatch, anything from your side — write back. The specs are a target, not a wall.

V. THE TWO NIGHTS

The first chapter has two scheduled moments. Both are deliberately curated. Both are non-negotiable as cinema events — they happen with you, or they do not happen. Events and community as the spine, not the garnish, is the entire architectural choice this platform is making against the void.

— THE FIRST NIGHT —

Founding Filmmakers, Sunday, May 24, 2026.

Private, gated, peer-only. The platform opens for the first time, with the founding filmmakers and the founder in the room. Magic-link sign-in, allowlist-only — no public URL works, no link forwards, no spillover. The work on the walls that night is yours and the others'. Your films are the catalog.

No press, no metrics, no audience-facing spectacle. The point of the first night is that the people who built the institution are the first to see it standing up.

DIONYSIA First Light, June 8–10, 2026 (one evening, date confirmed by June 1).

On the evening of June 8–10, we'll open the doors a little wider — for one night only. Film experts, curators, fellow artists, and the people you'd want in the room are invited to a live premiere of the founding work. You'll be the host, not the visitor. More on that closer to the date.

Live comment surface (Discord, Telegram, or Substack — locked by June 1). One founding film unveiled in full. The filmmaker present in the live room for thirty to forty-five minutes after the credits roll. Format borrowed from MUBI's "Film of the Night" and the indie album-release listening party, sharpened for cinema.

Your role on the second night, if you choose it, is not to perform. It is to be in the room while serious people watch your work for the first time, and to answer the questions that follow with the same care you put into making it.

Panama sits roughly an hour behind Toronto on the clock. Both nights run effectively on the same evening — no time-zone gymnastics, no late-night accommodations. The founding circle's logistics flex around you regardless.

VI. A DIRECT LINE

There is no support queue. There is no founding-creator portal. There is one person running this, and that person is reachable.

For anything substantive — film delivery, the editorial framing of your work, the second-night logistics, a doubt about the institution, an idea that should change the platform — write to kanishtuteja@gmail.com directly. Replies inside twenty-four hours, usually faster.

The platform itself lives at dionysia.ca. Until May 24 it shows a single opening surface. On the first night, the room behind it opens, and your allowlisted email gets you in.

If something is wrong, say it directly. The founding circle is small enough — and serious enough — that there is no professional reason to soften the signal. You're not a customer. You're a peer.

VII. CLOSING

The cultural surfaces that defined the last century of cinema — the studios, the festivals, the houses — all began with a founding circle of artists who took the work seriously before anyone was watching.

DIONYSIA is being built to be one of those surfaces for the medium that comes next: to be everywhere this work deserves to be seen, on every screen it deserves to live on, for as long as cinema is made this way. The institution begins with you in it.

The reel is hand-set, frame by frame. Thank you for the phrase that named the void this place is being built to refuse.

— ONE LAST WORD, JUST FOR YOU —

Roxanne, the arc — from four decades inside the animated-cinema pipeline (on Spielberg's An American Tail, on the Oscar-nominated The Village, on the Emmy-winning Arthur, on the documentary work for Science Channel, Discovery, and National Geographic) to becoming an Emmy Award winner in your own right and a Creative Partner to the leading AI platforms, all of it carried sometimes as Roxanne Ducharme and sometimes as TrashCanRoxanne — is the deepest profile in the founding circle. A cinema veteran whose body of work is already in the canon, now directing in a new medium with the same hand and the same eye. Most filmmakers in this medium are still building toward the discipline you brought with you. You are not most filmmakers.

The path from a BFA in Cinema at Concordia in Montreal to a French-Canadian filmmaker working out of El Valle de Antón is itself a quiet statement that this medium is not bound to any single capital — and the founding circle, with you in it, gains the depth most artists in the new tools are still working toward, plus the relocation that says cinema can be made wherever the eye is.

Whatever the work you'd want this place to be defined by — bring it. Whatever needs to flex around your studio rhythm, your platform partnerships, or the rhythm of a life designed deliberately around the work — say it. The room is being built with that conversation already in mind.

Welcome in, when you are.
